“Now that his horse lay dead, he was no longer able to continue his pursuit as before. Also he had killed the lord, who had continued riding on, passing through a second portcullis and letting it fall behind him. Now the archers could neither observe nor attack.”